From inside the unseasonable heat & softness of the body’s first afternoon opening

shoulders shimmer
swollen school yard laughter
the slow moving creatures

orbit one another as if our future selves know this to be the beginning of our slow descent

into what we had always known to lie just beyond

the page its hushed doors
beyond the cool
walls of a palm

pressed over our eyes
trying to delay
the elastic snap

of vision’s
membrane & still the adults are forgetting how

our eyes open into one another how ears too those hidden gaping orifices unfurl

the bone’s slow swelling until we peek over the descent & fall into the water
melon mouth of summer.